

Quantum thermodynamics of fluorescence and "quantum heat"

Benjamin Huard

Quantum coherence and entanglement lead to modifications of thermodynamics quantities. In this talk we will discuss one of the simplest experimental configurations where these modifications can be expressed. By directly measuring the power flows between a superconducting qubit and its environment, we explore how work and heat are affected by quantum mechanics.